Hi Sadie,

Here is the latest information which Andrea obtained from the Utility Director at Ft Berthold (Maynard Demaray), plus a rough map that IHS prepared showing the relative locations of their plants/intakes and what we know of the spill location.

We will continue updates as we learn anything more definitive.

Mindy

Hey Mindy,

Just talked to Maynard and he did not know there was a spill. I read the location description from the article to him and he said the Mandaree intake would not be impacted. I also asked about the Parshall intake and he said "as the crow flies" it is about 20 miles from the Skunk Bay area and did not think it would be impacted either. But from the info I have, it looks closer than 20 miles - I think he was basing the distance to the town of Parshall and not the intake. He said he is going look into this further and if he finds out anything additional he will give me a call back tomorrow.

Feel free to share with Sadie.

Thanks! andrea

Hey Mindy,

I guess I'd like to clarify that from the info that I have, which is not much, I don't think any of the tribal intakes would be impacted. From the description it sounds like the spill is downstream of the Mandaree intake. However, the Parshall intake (Parshall is regulated by the state of ND) would be the closest intake to the spill.

It would be nice to know from the article who responded saying there was no threat to water resources. They may have more accurate info than we do at this point as far as lat/longs, etc.

Thanks!
andrea

After discussing with Andrea Griese, it is unlikely it would have reached any of the tribal system intakes up there. We have a call into Laura Williams (ER) to see if they have more information, we were never notified until this morning about the spill.

it sounds like there was a second spill. do we have any information about that and whether it reached drinking water sources?
